The Aim of the Journal is to promote enquiry into the working of human intelligence. In this sense it is interdisciplinary; but it seeks also to draw special attention to work in the field of structural thinking and organization. The Institute itself conducts researches into human development making use of the techniques of Systematics, and papers reporting the results are published regularly in the Journal. Systematics is a discipline for the extension of understanding which has grown out of twenty years of research at the Institute. The Editors will also consider papers bearing upon the operation of Intelligence in any field of human endeavour, the criterion of acceptance being originality, scientific and literary quality and relevance to the general theme.
